

SNORTING GREEN

It Was All A Kidd-- Jason To Stay At Cal

*By Roy Packer
Testicle Staff Writer*

Just two days after his emotional press conference to announce he will forgo his final two years of college eligibility to enter the NBA draft, superstar point guard and first team All-American Jason Kidd admitted it was all a big joke. He will not be leaving U.C. Berkeley and in fact will continue his studies and get his degree.

"I never planned to go pro after only two years," Kidd commented. "All the fuss about my decision was just a scheme cooked up by the Athletic Department to garner publicity for Cal sports. In fact, I have never intended to play for the NBA. The only reason I am playing ball for Cal is because I get to wear these really cool shorts," Kidd added as he pulled up on the bottom half of his trademark basketball uniform, which had fallen down to his ankles.

Kidd explained that his real dream is to work in Northern Thailand after he graduates, so he can use his inner city experience to help young hill tribe women avoid the pitfalls of the rampant prostitution trade in that country. "I really want to help women in developing countries, which is why I have changed my major from Undeclared to the Political Economy of Newly Industrialized Societies. I really enjoy studying PENIS," Kidd said as he left to rape his girlfriend of three hours.

Kidd plans to play for Cal for two more years, unless it conflicts with his homework, and vowed that next season he promises to take the team at least to the second round of the NIT post season tourney.

Todd Bozeman was stunned by the news and denied rumors that Lamond Murray will play water polo next year for Stanford. Stifling tears, Bozeman commented "Lou Campanelli is a prick; I hope he gets in a head on collision with that lardbutt Keith Gilbertson. I wish you guys in the press would stop blowing everything I say out of proportion."

U.C. Berkeley Chancellor Tien commented that the university will not tolerate fashion intolerance on campus for students and particularly for student athletes who wear their britches too low. Tien denied persistent rumors that former Cal basketball coach Lou Campanelli was fired last year because his name sounded too much like Campanile. The team's practices were disrupted several times during the season when hordes of confused Japanese tourists stormed Harmon gym and attempted to climb Campanelli for a view of the Golden Gate Bridge.

Jason Kidd's inner city experience will help him assist those in need after he graduates.

Kidd Admits It Was All A Hoax

*By Neil Murgatroid
Cal Basketball Beat-Off Writer*

At the same time that Michael Jackson was holding a 13 year old boy, Cal point guard Jason Kidd was holding a press conference to announce he will stay in college for two more years.

Kidd said the earlier press conference (see related story) was just a team prank played on head coach Todd Bozeman. However, Kidd did confirm that while he will stay at Cal for two more years, he won't play basketball.

"Play basketball?" replied a surprised Kidd. "Oh no, I won't do that." Instead, the All-American point guard will turn his attention to studying the Tie culture, switching his major from Basket Weaving to a newly created major: Thai's, Ties and Ta-ta's. The major emphasizes a sociological look at Asian culture, formal wear and large bozangas.

It is unclear how Kidd's decision will affect All-African American forward Lamond Murray, but early indications are that Murray is already very affected, speaking with a pretentious british accent and often saying things like "That's just a smashing idea!"

LAG Meetings Canceled

Associated Press

Meetings for the Lethargics Anonymous Group (LAG) have been discontinued due to a lack of interest.